I am pleased to present the 2021 Annual Report (the “Report”) of summary statistical information produced by the Department of Financial and Professional Regulation (the “Department”) pursuant to Public Act 100-286. The Report contains valuable and insightful information about the applicants for the Department's licensed professions, with a focus on those who have past criminal convictions and the outcomes of those applications. This Act has at its core fundamental principles of restorative justice and the Report provides an equitable lens through which to evaluate applicants for licensure who have prior criminal convictions.

The Report demonstrates that no applicants with criminal convictions were denied licensure due to their conviction, and only a small percentage were because they did not continue to pursue the licenses for which they applied. The Report underscores the Department’s commitment to applying fair, unbiased, and even-handed mitigating factors in the licensing process so that having a past criminal conviction is rarely, in and of itself, a bar to obtaining a professional license.

There are some crimes that are so serious and some professions so sensitive that a license cannot be granted as a matter of law. However, for applicants who did not report offenses that automatically excluded them from licensure, this is not the case. In 2021 the Department received almost 107,000 license applications. Of the over 1,100 applicants in 2021 with past criminal records, zero were denied a license, in whole or in part, because of their conviction. Further, 72 or six percent of those applicants were provided the opportunity for a hearing but elected to not request one or pursue the application. If those applicants had chosen to request a hearing and pursue their application, there is a high likelihood that the application would have been granted as the Department does consider mitigating factors and evidence of rehabilitation once presented. Simply put, if you have a past criminal conviction and that conviction does not create a legal bar, it is highly unlikely that the conviction itself will prevent you from being licensed.

The Department encourages otherwise qualified people with previous convictions to apply and seek their license. A non-excluded conviction rarely prevents a license from being granted, yet the number and percentage of applications we receive from those with previous convictions remains low compared to the overall applicant pool. Studies have repeatedly found that employment helps formerly incarcerated people gain economic stability after release and reduces recidivism. The Department recognizes that becoming a licensed professional can be a gateway to economic opportunity, and we encourage all qualified applicants to apply, including those with past criminal records.

The Department continues to invest significant effort in and continually renew its commitment to making the application process more straightforward and user friendly for applicants with a prior criminal conviction. While there are several steps in any license application process, there are often additional steps for those with past convictions. With the help of feedback from some of our community partners who serve this population, we have improved our website, <https://idfpr.illinois.gov> to provide additional and clearer information about the process for applicants with a prior conviction. The Department will continue to look for ways to improve both the application process and the way we communicate with applicants with prior convictions, with a continued goal of removing unnecessary and potentially unjust barriers to access while using its equity lens in determining whether granting a license is appropriate.

I hope you find the information in this Report useful and encouraging. There is more we can do to ensure that a prior conviction will not unreasonably impede an applicant's ability to engage in the practice for which a license is sought and the Department is dedicated to that objective. As the data shows, the Department's current practices reflect its commitment to restorative justice and in the vast majority of cases, the mere existence of a past criminal conviction is not a barrier to licensure or the economic opportunity that comes with being a licensed professional.
